An add-on for Firefox to help do-it-yourself PC repair and diagnostics. This Add-on is made for PC users that do not want to call a repair shop, but rather do it themselves to diagnose the problems that can occur. Freeware Add-on Features - Over 9,000 types of common hardware problems that can occur. - Tools for Windows XP, Vista, and 7 and Mac OS X. - Reports and charts show diagnostic results. - All diagnostic data is saved to a disk and can be exported as HTML or PDF. - A help message will be displayed if a button is not pressed for more than 5 seconds. Windows 7 has been extended to support functions that previously did not have a Windows 7 equivalent. The following features are not yet implemented: - Automatic reopening of Windows - Maximization and restoring - Desktop and all the programs' when running We have decided to remove the standalone version (download from the link) because even though it is still popular, Mozilla and its contributors have been working hard on a replacement, so please use the optional "An Add-on for Firefox to help do-it-yourself PC repair and diagnostics" with Firefox for Windows instead. This site is read-only.Q: How to refactor this type of function which needs a function name? I would like to write something like a library function that i can use inside other function easily, something like this: void somethingElse(int x); void anotherFunction(int y); void main() { int x=1,y=2; anotherFunction(x); somethingElse(y); } void somethingElse(int x) { std::cout <
